EXPANSION OF GLOSA VOCABULARY

Glosa 1000 easily suffices for good intelligent conversation on all topics.

Many people, however, feel the need for a much larger vocabulary for literary needs and mere variety.

Others will want to converse on more specialized subjects. Some of these such as Biology, Medicine and Horticulture use an excellent international Terminology, which is covered by our Glosa 6000 and Advanced 5000 dictionaries.

Other subjects, however, such as Law and Architecture have no truly international vocabulary. In such cases it will be preferable to adapt those Latin forms which are commonest amongst the Romance languages, which of course are Latin-based.

We shall be producing various specialized dictionaries of this sort as soon as possible giving priority to the Commercial Vocabulary, which is already mostly Latinized anyway. For example trade will obviously be rendered by KOMERCE. supply and demand by OFER E DEMANDA. a tax haven U FISKA ASILA.

A few points to note:

All words ending in -tion are derived from Latin. These are glosarized by simply removing the final n.

Many L. verbs ending in -ate can be abbreviated to -a. Thus, confiscate becomes KONFISKA in Glosa.

Auction is L and becomes AUKTIO.

Stocks and shares in accordance with the Romance languages become PLU AKTIO.

It will be quite easy to compile a Commercial Dictionary hopefully within the next few months.

Those who know their L and G roots will find them recurring in the Commercial Vocabulary. eg. Income and Expenditure account is RECEPT E DISPENSA KONTO. You can easily pick out CEPTI, receive, and SPEND.

In many cases the L. root simply acquires a prefix.

Suffixes are not important for Glosa as they are often nothing but prehistoric grammatical inflexions. The ordinary people of Rome got rid of a lot of them.

This means that acquiring a bigger Glosa vocabulary involves being able to recognize a Latin or Greek word, chopping off its tail, leaving a possible prefix + root.

Needless to say no matter how much we enlarge our vocabulary we must never tamper with the Glosa Mechanics. That is fixed and perfectly satisfactory.

A few people have asked what they should do when they consult one of our Eurolingua- Glosa dictionaries, and can't find the Euro-word they want. In practically every case this is because they have not fully understood that;

A Glosa word or root always stands for a concept. It never corresponds to only one single Euro-word. Apart of course from a noun, which always stands for a definite thing. In our dictionaries we have only enough space for one or two Euro-words specifying the meaning of a Glosa word. If we had the space we could list 100 or more Euro-words equivalent to each Glosa word. Thus, G. FOTO is equivalent to light in English. We haven't space for the many others, such as: radiant, luminous, brilliant, splendor, glare, clear, coruscate, incandescent, scintillation, shine, refulgence, luster, sheen, sparkle, glitter, glimmer, gleam.....and many many more. Context usually provides greater detail. And you can always modify FOTO by prepositing a modifier, such as FO-FOTO, brilliant PUSI-, MIKRO-, MEGA-, DINA-, RUBI etc, VIBRA-, MUTA-, VARI-, SEMI-, MANA- EO-FOTO....

Also instead of FOTO there are plenty of Glosa homosemes such as: AGLAO splendid AMARISO sparkle, ARDE glow, ARGO white ARGUTO bright ASTRAPE lightning. FLUORESCE, KANDE incandescent, KLARESCE gleam, FACI firebrand. HELENE torch JUBAR heavenly light. LAUTO brilliant LUSTRO illuminated. LUCI bright, clear. LIKNO lamplight MAZDA god of light. FENO shining, FOEBO radiant RADIA, beaming...etc, etc.

Many of these are listed in Glosa 6000.

Nevertheless, the Central Glosa 1000 will always suffice.

SEKUNDA BAHAI MUNDA KONGRESI

The following article is contributed by Mrs. Evelyn Jerrard. She is a fervent believer in the Bahá'í faith, and an enthusiastic Glosisti.

Glosa makes a special appeal to many Bahá'í people, and we have mentioned the Bahá'í Movement several times in PGN, but for the benefit of those many new Glosistis who may wonder about the connexion between Glosa and a World Religion we append a brief note about it.

The Bahá'í faith developed in Iran. The founder was Bahá'u'llah, who over 100 years ago wrote;

"It behoveth the sovereigns of the world - may God assist them - or the ministers of earth to take counsel together and to adopt one of the existing languages or a new one to be taught to children in schools throughout the world; and likewise one script. Thus the whole earth will come to be regarded as one country."

There is nothing narrow about Bahá'í. It embraces all other religions together with the Modern Sci-Tek World.

Another of their quotes is;

"Religion and Science are the two wings upon which man's intelligence can soar into the heights, with which the human soul can progress. It is not possible to fly with only one wing. When a man tries to fly with the wing of religion alone he quickly falls into the quagmire of superstition, whilst, on the other hand, with the wing of science alone he will also make no progress, but fall into the despairing slough of materialism."

The "Herald of the South" a Bahá'í journal published in Australia printed a long detailed article about Glosa in 1989. Other Bahá'í journals which have printed articles about Glosa are; Bahá'í News in U.S.A. Glory in India. And a first Glosa lesson was sent out in one of the educational mailings which go to children of Bahá'í families in Britain.

GLOSA LEARNS FROM CHINESE

In several recent PGN's we have mentioned the great similarity between Chinese and Glosa. Not in vocabulary of course but in the absence of grammar. We have been strangely fortunate lately to meet a number of Chinese students in London. By chance. On learning about Glosa they all remark spontaneously on this close resemblance. When a Chinese first has to study a Euro language she is always shocked and astonished at the absurdity of our rubbishy 'grammars.'

In Chinese there is nothing unnecessary. There are no 'empty' words. In the cases of French, German and Russian they come across gender (whereby a thing is either masc, fem. or neuter), number, inflexions, agreement of adjectives and nouns and such like paraphernalia.

There is still an absurd idea amongst Europeans that there are primitive and advanced languages. That primitive languages are simple corresponding to the degree of 'civilization' of the speakers, and of course European languages are suitably complex corresponding to our 'advanced' science and technology.

This is all utter nonsense. Its primitive languages which are complex; and the more advanced which get tidied up, simplified.

It is not generally understood even by the Chinese themselves that Europe got practically all of its technological ideas from China. Modern agriculture, astronomy, shipping, oil industry, music, decimal mathematics, poison gas, rockets, wheelbarrows, parachutes, hot-air balloons, manned flight, alcohol, printing, chess and the steam-engine all come from the Chinese.

They invented the ship's rudder and the compass, with which Europeans made their important voyages of discovery, and learnt about the actual size of the earth.

The Chinese invented the stirrup and harness. The poor horses of Europe had to pull their burdens with a rope which went round their throat! The harness transferred the pull to their shoulders, which made a tremendous difference. Try putting on your rucksack so that the weight pulls on your wind-pipe! The Chinese invented paper and movable type for printing.

They have made great contributions to Medicine. They worked out the circulation of the blood centuries before Harvey 'discovered' it in the West. And there's Acupuncture, which is very slowly becoming increasingly popular in the West.

The future world at the beginning of the 21st century is going to develop out of the combined efforts of East and West.

Westerners have come to feel arrogantly that the Modern Scientific and technical world comes from their inventiveness, and they have been encouraged in this belief through the strange fact that the Chinese themselves have forgotten their own enormous contributions to Civilization. There's nothing primitive about the Chinese!

So now to Language.

The more advanced languages of Europe very very slowly simplify. It is a process always speeded up by war, conquest and revolutions, by historical accidents.

The Victorians discovered Sanskrit with its enormous complexity, and a few of them recognized that it was obviously closely related to the Euro-languages, and our reluctant linguists were forced to recognize that languages change.....evolve. That all the chief European languages are related. Consider this letter written in 1788 by William Jones, Chief Justice at Fort William in Bengal.....

"The Sanskrit language, whatever be its antiquity, is of a wonderful structure; more perfect than the Greek, more copious than the Latin, and more exquisitely refined than either; yet bearing to both a strong affinity, both in the roots of verbs and in the forms of grammar, than could have been produced by accident....." And so on.

By "more perfect than the Greek" he meant more complex. The Sanskrit verb had 743 different forms, English now has 4 or 5, as in give, giveS, givING, gAve, givEN. This is not, as in the case of Chinese, the result of efficient planning. It is the result of historical accidents that English has happily got rid of over 700 flexions.

So Sanskrit is a heap of linguistic rubbish inherited throughout millenia important only because of the tremendous psychological insight of its speakers, who were anything but primitive. William Jones was presumably an 'expert'.

"Experts" are, as is well known, devices produced by a parasitic establishment for preserving the rubbish of the ages, and condemning all innovation. Fortunately the worst they can do is to delay. They cannot stop progress. Look into the detailed history of any invention and you will find the 'experts' did all they could to discourage it. The possibility of flight by heavier than air machines is one. Sir Frank Whittle's invention of the jet is another.

Back to Chinese language, which has no grammar at all. It is now known that it was once in just such a mess as Sanskrit and other primitive languages, but at a certain period in its history several thousands of years ago it was deliberately simplified. They cleared out everything that was 'empty' of meaning, so that Chinese is now in some ways a constructed language!

Consider the following points about Chinese;.....

A and an. No indefinite article in Chinese. In order to say "I would like a cup of tea" the Chinese say "I like drink cup tea".

Adjectives which follow a noun are treated as verbs. You don't translate 'is or are'. "The sea is very warm" becomes "Sea very warm".

Verb to be is SHI, which translates am, is and are.

Comparatives and Superlatives are as simple as in Glosa. They have a simple particle for 'more' and one for 'most'.

Days of week These are numbered preceded by the word for Week. Monday is Week 1, Tuesday week 2 and so on.

Future tense. The Chinese for "come" can mean she is coming, she will come, she came. The presence of a word like 'tomorrow' in the context is sufficient to suggest the future.

She and He in Chinese TA, which also means her and him.

The spoken word is the same for the two sexes, but the written characters are different.

Possessive her and his are obtained by adding DE to TA. So SHI TADE means 'it' is hers/his.

I and Me are both represented by WO. My is WODE.

Imperative can be formed by using the simple verb, but the chinese dont like plain imperatives. They prefer to insert 'please'.

Negative is formed by prepositing BU (not) before the verb. BU corresponds to Glosa NE.

NO! Theres no word for NO! Instead, you repeat the verb with the negative BU in front. in answer to question "Are you going"? you say simply "Not go".

Of is rendered by DE, but word-order is reversed, so "The people of China" becomes "China de people", so in a way DE corresponds to english possessive apostrophe 's.

Passive not popular in chinese, but usually formed by putting particle BEI just before verb.

Past Tense doesnt exist. Indicated if necessary by time word in context. Such as 'yesterday.'

Personal pronouns undergo no change like english she to her and he to him. Theres no accusative case. You say simply "Yesterday I see she".

Plural. Doesnt exist. SHU can mean a book, the book or books.

Questions. 1. By use of particle MA at end of statement

2. By providing alternatives. "Is she going?" becomes "She go / not go?". Somewhat like english "She'll go, wont she?". 3. By using a question word like When? Who? Where? etc. as in glosa.

The. There are no definite articles in chinese.

SHU can mean, the book, a book, or books.

Verbs. Like Glosa chinese verbs never change, have no flexions.

Word Order 1. Very like english. The chinese like the topic of the sentence to come first. So "I dont like this town" becomes "This town, I not like".

2. They like words to do with place and time to come near the beginning. "I'm going to Paris tomorrow" becomes "I tomorrow go Paris". "She lives in Paris" becomes "She in Paris lives".

Yes! No chinese word for Yes. Simply repeat verb. "Do you like London?" becomes "I like"

You in chinese is NI. A politer form is NIN which corrsponds somewhat to english "I wonder whether you would be so kind as to.....". NIN is quicker than the english!

The chinese never repeat words that have already been said in a conversation.

No word for 'and' when its a conjunction. For It was a fine day, and I went out you say. It was fine. I went out. But you can use "and" for joining two nouns. Men and women

These are just a few examples of chinese mechanics, illustrating the very great similarity to glosa.
